1. BPMN Diagram

1.1. Changes according to feedback of teachers:

In the previous bpmn diagram, “Update database” and “Send to seller” were executed in parallel gateway. Teachers pointed out error in this as many buyers may want to buy at the same time and only one will be successful in updating the database, others will be rejected and then seller will be notified for delivery. It needed to be sequential.

In the updated diagram, these two are shown sequential.

3. Entity Relationship Diagram (ERD)

3.1. Changes according to the feedback of teachers:

There was a missing attribute (offered_price) in the Order Post table. We have added the attribute in each of subclass of the Order Post table.

There was a problem with the one to one relation between order and product table. We have fixed the problem by keeping only one table (product table) such that both advertisement table and Full Order List table has one to many relation with product table and Advertisement table has a one to many relation with cart products table.

5. Collaboration Diagram

5.1. Changes according to feedback of teachers:

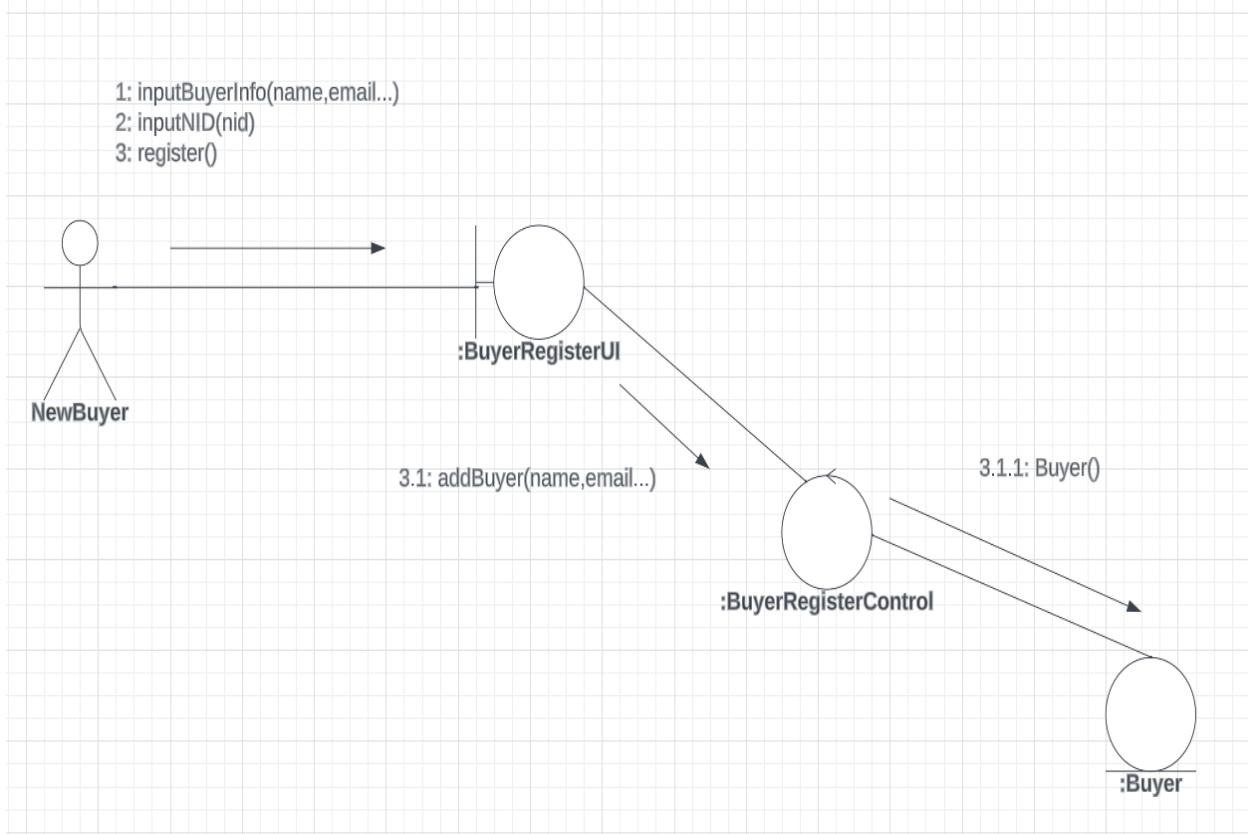

In case of advance payment, when buyer confirms that the product has been received, then seller would receive the advance payment from admin's merchant account. Teachers had told us to notify the seller about his receiving payment.

So we have included this part. Here when buyer confirms about his product receiving, admin sends the due payment from merchant account to seller account manually and then updates the payment info of the order. Then the corresponding seller will be notified about his payment receiving.
